9. Cookie Management

What is a "cookie"?

A cookie is an electronic tracer file that has been stored on the terminal (a computer, tablet, smartphone and so on). They are read, each time you browse through a website, for example, or when you read an email, install or use a piece of software, including cell phone applications. They are stored regardless of the type of terminal you use (see: <https://www.cnil.fr/fr/cookies-traceurs-que-dit-la-loi>).

When browsing this website, "cookies" from the company owning the said website and/or third-party companies may end up on your terminal.

The first time you browse this website, a "cookie" consent management window will appear. From then on, in order to continue browsing the website, you will have to choose to give your consent or not to. You will also have the option to customize the cookie category preferences you wish to accept or not. The type of consent you gave will be stored as a functional "cookie" in your browser. It will remain there over a three (3)-month period. You, as a user, can change your preferences at any time.

The "cookies" present on this website fall into three (3) categories:

A. Essential cookies

This website uses cookies to run properly, which is why these cookies must remain operational.

B. Performance Cookies

These cookies help us to improve your online experience. They are not essential, but without them, some features may not work.

These cookies allow us to determine how many visitors you have and the sources of your traffic, so we can measure and improve the performance of our website. They also help us identify the most/least visited pages and evaluate how visitors navigate the website. All the information collected by these cookies is aggregated and therefore anonymized.

C. Targeted Advertising Cookies

Marketing cookies are generally used to show you ads that match your interests. When you visit another website, your browser's cookie is recognized and you are sent selected advertising targeted specifically towards you based on the information stored in that cookie.

Any information collected by our performance cookies will only be used to track the amount, type and the pattern(s) of user traffic on this website, so as to improve on the design and layout of this website. They are also used for other administrative and planning purposes, and to improve the overall service we provide you.
